Mr J. A. Spender, the Editor of the The Company's Steamship 'SUI AN,' Westminster Gazette, who has just visited India, writing in his paper on the Indian Departure from Macso at 5 P.M. Civil Service. >ays: -

"No one can be for even a short time in India without becoming aware that the Civil Service feels aggrieved. One official a'ter another will tell you that it is the butt of unfounded criticisms by ignorant members of Parliament, that it is incessantly blamed by newspapers which know neither its virtues nor its difficulties, and that this is having a serious effect in discouraging able young men from joining it.

"The Service, Lowever, has partly itself to thank if curiosity of late years had been livelier than usual. It has talked to us a great deal about Indian unrest, from which the Britisher has argued that something is wrong which needs looking into. Infallibility has always to be justified by result. " But still more, as every Angle-Indian will tell you, the zeitgest is at work among the natives. No one now talks about the unchanging East. The older officials say that the conditions of the Service have absolutely changed in the twenty five or thirty years that they have known it. BRITISH PRESS ON THE REVOLUTION. The comments of the British press on the Revolution and on the establishment of a Republican Government in China, as revealed by recent mail papers, are extremely interesting. They vary from frank congratulation and unabashed optimism to equally frank skepticism. The Wational Review notes first that The Daily Chronicle seizes the whole situation and puts it in a nuteliell :-

All notion, or, more correctly, a medley of ristions, which sixes the far morning of world's story has re_arded its Sovereigns as demigods, has become Republic. This event, the most dramatic and stupendous constitutional thange in all history, involves one-third of the human rac. And this vast change, so great that its real significance and magnitude are ment are far from certain. The Manchus difficult to comprehend, has been brought aliens who well the supreme power in about by the most surprising revolution China by successful invasion, constitute ever witnessed. Once again the slow- but one per cent. of the total population.

Reformers of the Sun Yat-sen type are moving East has fascinated and astounded most likely in a still larger minority. the West by rapidity of movement. This They have yet to show that they are wonderful desma has been accompanied, capable of consolidating their influence too, by compar tively little bloodebed, and and authority over many millions of it has cuded as never similar drams conclinded before. There has been no last principles absolutely unlike the new ones desperate stand of the Imperialists in the Palace, no hasty flight of the falleng no vengeance meted out to the members of the unpopular, discredited ruling caste. The Manchus go into exile with all the pomp and cimounstance which have ordered the movements of the Boyal House during centuries of power. Dreply-rooted genius for etiquette" has not been lost even in the fall from a throne. At first blush, Republicanium seems hopelessly out of keeping with everything we know of Chinese ideas and traditions. But the race which could organize such swift and certain triumph has in it power to hold aloft that flag it has carried to victory. ()ther journals take leave to wonder at the way the thing has been done-so completely what was not expected, and yet so completely satisfying to all concerned. It is in this strain. The Morning Post

It is difficult to know-which to marvel at more, the revolution itself or the means by princeses horrying off in secret from the which it has been brought about. In there any procedent for the rulers of a great Empire, compelled to surrender their SATURDAY, the 30th day of March, 1912, power and prerogetives, issuing solumn and formal edicts, with a view to signalizing the epening of a new regime? Suroly there has seldom been anything which supplies S67 better illustration of the passion of the Chinese people for the proper observance of form and ceremony in all the affairs of life. And the abdication of political power by the Manchus recalls another of the for settling disputes by pesceful compromise instead of by an appeal to arms. It is truethat the revolution began by armedinaurrec tion, and that the Court capitalited in fact to the pressure of force. I'ut the conflict was not fought out to the bitter end, and the final settlement is the outcome of weeks of delicate negotiation. Further, the feet that the Throne proclaims its own abdica. tion is a concession to the regard always paid by the people to the matter of saving face; Bo that, whilst the revolution may be said to be the product of Western influences, it has all through been conduct ed in a fashion muentially Chinese, But in any case, the transition from an Empire tos forpublicas to amating at to be almost stupery ug On the other hand we have the crosking columns of The Darly Telegraph which willet admitting the worderfulness of the avant feels doubtful about the fulure; In rout wonderful morid, where now an or Day. For terms arrow to the Manual St. Co. House, the seally morte entitle and firmness of will. It would be curious to accertain with what kind of hopefulness Yum Shin-ka'l himself looks forward to the new Government of China, According to all natural precedents, the novei Republic is not lively to have, at al events at the outset, a very easy prosperous career. The only question a present unsolved, with regard to the Chinese Republic is whether for more years than we suspect there has been proceeding throughout the various provinces of which the country is composed a subtle fermenfatible of mind, temper, thoughts, and ideals, sowly proparatory of and leading up to the decisive event. If that be so then there are hopes of the Chinese Republic ; but it must be confessed that good deal of modern experience makes the ordinary observer a little skeptical. Still more pessimistic are the comments of The Standard: It remains to be seen whether the Edicts issued on 12th January. cutline with anything like accuracy the course of events in China, even in the immediate future. The charges, indeed, of a quiet and orderly transition from absolute monarchy to republic n governunder a system of government based of which it is proposed to introduce. The ductility of the populace, the discipline of the army the conservative instincts of the literatic and the subterraneun operations of secret societies are factors which may prove more potent than the vision that inspire the previsional cambrilla at Nanking, and have now secured the reinstant assent of Yuan Bhibikial and a helpless, corrupt, disillusioned Court.

We may note in conclusion however, that The Evening Standard not only admires the methods by which the civil strife was brought to a close, but comphasizes the very point to which we devoted considerable space in our columns three weeks ago, namely, that everything has been done as the town clerk of Ephesus would have it done ... decently and in order," and the "transfer of authority takes place in a quite regular and constitutional fashion." This happy consummation is thus described : In the Mongolian fashion the Manchus have committed their own happy despatch. There mover was such a polite and dignified revolution, so far at least as the Central Government is concerned. Here, sa in many other respects, the East can give lessons to the West, especially in manners. It is no case of kings and princes and back doors of their palacer, with savage mobs thirting for their blood on the other side; no unhappy Royal personages sent to the scallold, or even left to wander, shabby and impocunious " rou en exil," in a foreign country. Everything is done decently and in order. The Manchu dypasty, having first made sure that it is to be very comfurtably provided for, exercises, its still despotic power to renounce the Throne and declars that the Republican form of government is henceforth to prevail. Thus the transfer of authority takes place in a quite regular and constitutional faction. Nobody can may the Republic is illegal, since it is establish-

GREAT ACTRESS.

Miss Florence St. John's Early Struggles.

The death of Miss Florence St. John, the famous actress who in the 'seventies and 'eighties captivated all London by the charm of her voice and her personality, has aroused old and pleasant memories among countless playgoers says the Daily Mad. A with some knowledge of engineering Her death occurred at 40. Gloucester-terrace, Hyde Park, and was due to heart failure following internal hamourhage. She was not quite hity-seven years of age, but her life was so full of adventure and change, hardship and success, that one felt she had lived many years more than other women of her age. Miss St. John was born at Tavistock of a Scotch father and a Cornish mother. Music, singing, and acting were the sole passions of her childhood. At the ripe age of fourteen years and seven 377 months she married the late Mr St. John After his death a few years later she married the late Mr Marius, and her third husband, with whom her wedding took place only a few years ago, was Mr Arthur

> MER GREATEST SUCCESS. Her most triumphant success was in "Madame Favart" at the vanished Strand. Theatre in her early twenties. The piece was mild molodrams tinged with obvious sentiment and obvious fun and adorned with "catchy" tunes. Her pretty face and pretty voice and pretty manners, her enthusiastic admiration. Afterwards of "The Torpedo and the Whale" - "Nell Gwynne," Barbe Blue," "Lurstte," and other pieces, Her best work was accomplished between 1879 and 1890, and one of her last approarances was in "The Morry Peasant" at the Walderf Theatre some th ee years ago. But before her triumples she travelled a long and hard road. She used to relate that after seeing her first pantemime at the age of eight she went home and "played the fairy" with such vigour that she-swept a dresser clear 478 of crockery with broomstick which served as a wand. Her grandmother remarked, "That girl will come to a bad end-ahe is going to be an actress," and the hardship. of the next few years seemed likely to fulfil the prediction. When she was fourteen a friend of her family's bought a diorams—the clumsy predecessor of the cinematograph and sugaged a company to tour with it. The leading lady falling ill, Miss St. John, home for the holidays, was allowed to take her place. Her first marriage followed very shortly, and her parents were so incensed by it that they refused to allow her to return home. In sheer necessity she sought work on the stage and failed to get it. She came to London, and to support her dying husband was reduced to singing with a wheezy organ outside public-houses. Next she obtained an engagement at a Bristol musichall, where the audience tore up the scats and she and "the serio-comic lady, a big, beefy-looking woman," had to a week at the Oxford Music hall, and then she joined an English opers company, success as Madame Farart " for which the received at first only 28 per week St. John outlived almost all the other was in the Grand Duches. would get into fearful rages and jump on his hat and smash it at rehearsals. I was the only one who ever made Farnie cry on that he introduced in the last act of

'Madame Favart,' called 'Ob, Thy Heart."

It was an amusing accident on the first night of the play that brought Miss St.

John credit for the most merry and natural laughter ever heard on the stage. She had found difficulty in satisfying Farnie anxiously from the wings. At the crucial moment his false teeth fell out and the sight of him groping for them sent her into peals of genuina laughter at precisely the exceedingly sentimental, so much so that she would sometimes break down while singing anything of a tragic charater. Her career as a "star" of the first magnitude ended before she had much passed her prime. But in good fortune and ill she was ever ready to help a comrade, to join in a jest, and to r-joice with her friends with the charm of manner and spirit of which Petitions have been sent in from representative people, and from officials to the Governor-General, describing the actual condition of affairs. and asking that Government assistance be given at once. The Governor thinks that indemnities should be paid, and he has issued an edict asking all those who have suffered to send in at once an inventory of losses, that assistance may be furthooming. Captain Hutchinson, of the Yorkshire Regiment, who was a passenger, says that there were about 16 firstclass and 30 second-class passengers aboard who were abed at the time. It was a clear night. There was a terrible crash at five o'cleck in the morning. The Oceann was going at full speed, and she shivered from stem to stern. The passengers immediately rushed on deck.
